Description:

One-to-one tutoring provides an opportunity for doctoral students to assess and improve their English writing skills individually under the guidance of a qualified teacher.

Improving your scientific writing skills is a process that begins with establishing, first of all, where you are. This individual attention to your writing development, with the support of a tutor, is the first step to improving not only your current text, but also future texts and your overall impact as a writer of academic English.

The tutoring program aims to achieve the following:

- Raise your awareness of your strengths and weaknesses in English scientific writing
- Re-establish (where necessary) the basic rules of English scientific writing
- Examine the linearity of written communication and the structure of English texts
- Examine the conventions of subject-specific publications e.g. the pre-requisites of "IMRAD"
- Investigate (where necessary) citation conventions and plagiarism
- Utilize suitable AI-based tools to help in the writing process

You Will Need:

- Your own computer/internet connection with video conference ability!
- Your TEXT, TASK, or WRITING PLAN you want to discuss

Registration in StudIP

- Log in to StudIP using your WebSSO credentials (→support@luis.uni-hannover.de)
- Join the course "Online: One-To-One-Tutoring: Strategies for Writing Scientific Papers (C1)"
- Make an appointment for a writing consultation under the tab "Appointment slots"
- Read any relevant information given under the "Registration and Resources" tab

Please note:

- In order to complete your scientific publication, you are required to manage your own time appropriately, both within and outside of the tutoring sessions.
- To gain the maximum benefit from the tutoring, it is highly recommended to attend ten sessions.
- In order to allow a maximum number of users to participate in the One-to One-Tutoring, the number of sessions is limited to ten dates per user.
